

To whom it may concern at the FCC,

I was shocked and dismayed at your current attempts to allow cross ownership of media resources. It is only through checks and balances of several owners that we keep our system free from corruption, censorship, and half-truths. We should be moving farther away from corporate assimilation rather than toward it. This is just another step for big business in trying to establish a media monopoly. It is our basic democratic right to be able to trust and respect our sources of news and this can only be accomplished when the sources are unbiased. This is why I strongly urge the FCC to not only keep the existing laws banning cross ownership but to enforce them stronger.

Regards,

Amanda Clayton

Seattle, WA